Biogenic amines such as serotonin, dopamine, and octopamine are present in the insect brain and commonly regulate different aspects of behavior, including aggression, olfactory sensitivity, and learning. Because olfaction and aggressive behavior are associated with tasks such as defense and foraging, neurotransmitters may cause subcaste and age-related differences in division of labor.

As a consequence, this self-regenerating biogenic Mn cycle could render this type of wastewater treatment cost-efficient (Box 2) . Forrez et al. [29] examined the influence of biologically produced Mn oxides on the removal of EE2 in flow-through bioreactors that contained MOB and nitrifying bacteria.
