In April 1958, Yves Klein presented an exhibition in a white room at the Iris Clert gallery in Paris, devoid of all objects save for an empty cabinet. This milestone show, later known as the "exhibition of the void," debuted Klein's "immaterialization of painting": "an ambience, a pictorial climate that is invisible but present."

French painter Yves Klein (1928-1962). These two artists not only produced a number of monochromatic paintings-the former in black, the latter in blue-during the 1950's and 60's, but both also wrote extensively during this same period. In order to make sense of Ad Reinhardt's and Yves Klein's monochromatic work I have chosen to examine the texts
